

WILL DEDICATE PIONEER CEMETERY

Legion Posts To Take Part In Service At Mokena July 2nd

For many years a little forsaken cemetery on the edge of the village of Mokena on Wolf road has been the final resting place of many of the early pioneer families who settled in this community in the early 30's and 40's.

The cemetery was overgrown with weeds and brush completely hiding from view tomb stones marking the lonely graves of the forefathers. Occasionally some public spirited citizen would cut down this undergrowth but the following year there would be just as big a crop. Mokena village board often hired men to cut down this brush and weeds but still no effort was made to put this cemetery in a presentable shape.

Finally the Mokena Garden club took up the matter and early this Spring with the co-operation of town and village officers, effected a complete clean up of the final resting place of the early pioneers. Many tomb stones which had been hidden from the eyes of the world for many years were unearthed and placed in position. All the tangled undergrowth and weeds were removed and the plot is being turned into a memorial park. The club is planting beautiful flowers, flowering bushes and is going to make it a thing of beauty which it rightly deserves to be.

This plot is not only the final resting place of the early pioneer settlers but also of three soldiers. One grave which is rather outstanding, is that of Charles Denny, a Revolutionary War soldier who was buried on that spot on August 6, 1839.

There are also two graves of Civil war veterans, Charles Brill and the other Abraham Evans.

Mrs. Anton Benson, president of the Mokena Garden club, has done much noteworthy work in beautifying the cemetery with the aid of the members of the club. She thought it would be an appropriate thing to have a flag pole and a flag so that on national holidays the flag could be flown on this cemetery. Mrs. Benson's daughter, Mrs. Gordon Swanson, also has taken keen interest in this matter. She is employed in the Chicago Board of Trade and through her efforts the Board of Trade post 304 of the American Legion was interested in procuring a flag pole for the cemetery. This pole is made of steel and will be imbedded in a foundation of concrete, this assuring its permanency. Mayor Harry F. Mall of Mokena has donated the flag. As the cemetery has been without a name and acting on the suggestion made by the News-Bulletin, several weeks ago, that this burial plot should be named the Pioneer cemetery, the Garden club has decided to hold a Dedicatory program at the cemetery on Sunday afternoon, July 2, at 3 o'clock. A tentative program has been arranged in which members of the Board of Trade post of the American Legion will participate. The state champion bugler will also take part in the ceremonies. Attorney Chas. B. Elder of Mokena has been slated to give the address dedicating the flag pole and flag while Editor Wm. Semmler has been asked to give the dedicatory address naming the cemetery.

Several DAR chapters have also become interested in this cemetery due to the fact that a Revolutionary War soldier is buried here. Although the grave is marked with a regulation U. S. government marble grave marker the DAR suggested that a more suitable marker of the general DAR design with a Bronze plaque be placed at the grave site. Just when or how this will be done has not been announced.

Watch for the program in detail in our next issue.

Mokena Civic Asso. Is One Year Old; Re-elect Officers

The Mokena Civic association has just closed a successful year, being just one year old. At a meeting of this body held in the Immanuel Lutheran church parlors in Mokena, Monday evening, the members advocated that an effort be made to try and interest the Rock Island for better night train service.

The plan is to have a train stop at Mokena about 12:45 instead of the one now arriving at 1:45 and also to try to have a train going to Chicago in the evening at 10 o'clock. Following the discussion on this matter the association adopted resolutions to be sent to the village board of Mokena asking their cooperation in legal matters to condemn and try to have removed some unsightly dilapidated buildings along Front St. Plans were discussed for the second annual Home Coming by the Association to be held on September 15 and 16.

At the close of the session election of officers was held and the old officers were re-elected unanimously. They were: President, Robert A. Bechstein; vice-president, Ludwig Theil, secretary, John Fox, treasurer Everett Cooper.

President R. A. Bechstein then gave a brief talk on the progress of the association in its first year. This address was as follows:

Gentlemen: One year ago you elected me to the highest office you could bestow, that of President of the Mokena Civic association and I deem it a privilege and an honor to have served you in that capacity as your first presiding officer. It now therefore becomes my duty to give you an accounting of my stewardship. If I have made errors they were human; if I have offended they were unintentional and to all of you who so splendidly helped and supported by your kindly advice and unselfish efforts my grateful thanks.

In the way of accomplishment may I say that we were organized only one short year ago, for the purposes set forth in the Constitution, which summed up, means Community service and spirit, with a membership of eighteen, whilst today we have over sixty active members. Financially we started from Zero whereas today we show cash (Continued on back page)

Sandall of Wisner, Nebraska, a former pastor of the bride's church, solemnized the single ring ceremony.

The church was decorated in palms, and cut garden flowers which made a lovely background for the occasion.

Preceding the ceremony, Miss Elizabeth DeLong of Cullom sang "I Love You Truly" and "O, Promise Me", accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Donald Haley also of Cullom.

As Mrs. Haley played Lohengrin's wedding march, the bridal party took their place before the altar the ushers, Charles Hostert, brother of the bride and Merriel Haag, cousin of the groom, preceded.

CHILD OF EVIL

OCTAVUS ROY COHEN
WNU SERVICE

By OCTAVUS ROY COHEN

SYNOPSIS

Beautiful, young Kay Forrest has been employed by Christine Maynard, photographer, to pose for a series of pictures, the background of which will be exquisite Cathedral Gardens, famous Southern resort. Unknown to them, one Jeff Butler, mean, unscrupulous "swamp angel," has led a friend to spy on the two women. Kay, of necessity, is scantily clad while posing for the camera studies.

CHAPTER I—Continued

Jeff was pardonably triumphant. "Didn't I tell you?" he whispered. "Nary stitch."

"She's got a veil on," chided Mr. Ross.

"Shut! Ain't no thicker'n mosquito-nettin'."

They watched eagerly. They saw the efficient Miss Maynard, though they were not interested in her. They saw the smooth white body of a young and beautiful girl against a background of breath-taking color. But theirs was not an artistic appreciation. Their interest was lecherous . . . and tintured with righteousness, though it was not until the sun rose higher over the cypress trees and Kay became apprehensive; and until the girl had clothed herself again and padded back through the Gardens with Miss Maynard and the photographic equipment—that this righteousness was put into words.

Clem said, "It's awful." Then, "Me an' you can come back some other mawnin's, can't we, Jeff?"

"Sho'ly. But nobody ain't to be told. Not now."

"How come not?"

"'Cause then ev'body would start a-comin'. An' she'd find out."

Mr. Ross considered this judicially. "If we was ever to tell what's goin' on heah . . ."

Jeff Butler nodded grimly. "Some day we will," he said. "It'll be our bounden duty. An' when we . . ." he gestured expressively " . . . well, Beauregard County knows what to do with immoral females like her."

CHAPTER II

Breakfast was over—a delicious breakfast of hominy grits and bacon and of thin, light biscuits and crisp, crumbly waffles; of grapefruit and coffee and of bright conversation and good-natured badinage.

Kay Forrest was first from the table. She ran upstairs to her room, touched her makeup lightly and somewhat carelessly, pulled a little rust-colored tam over her soft brown hair, glanced at herself once more in the mirror over the ancient dresser and gave ear to the below-stairs summons from Barney Hamilton.

Kay walked to the head of the stairs and looked down upon the tall, blond young man: the Barney Hamilton who was never serious for a moment, yet who was rapidly becoming the most serious thing in Kay's life.

Barney gestured from the foot of the stairs. "The chariot awaits. Will the Princess be so gracious as to hurry before the road commences to swarm with tourists?"

Kay laughed as she walked down to meet him. He was so irrepressibly boyish, so chronically good-humored, so attractive in his own way: a bit slouchy (so that he looked less than his six feet), a bit human so that he was not too handsome, a bit too assured in his acceptance of the good things of life. A young man free from care, worry and responsibility; friendly with everybody, a young man who had set himself the task of enjoying life and, thus far, had made a very excellent job of it.

Kay said, "There's no sense in you driving all the way to town, Barney."

He grinned. "Which is probably the reason I do it. Let's travel."

Ruth Hamilton moved from the dining-room to join them. She was a striking-looking woman, slightly less blond than her tall son, and possessed of a poise and manner which was the despair of other Beverly ladies. She was forty-four, and one could still see more than a suggestion of the beauty which had once been hers. Kay was conscious now—as always—of the ambition to mature as Mrs. Hamilton had matured: with dignity and graciousness. Mrs. Hamilton said, "Must you go home this morning, Kay?"

"Yes, ma'am. Really."

"And you'll be back tomorrow?"

"Yes'm. Miss Maynard wants me."

Margaret called in from the veranda. "Take care of Barney. He's been driving more crazily than usual these past few days."

Barney backed the little car out of the shed and whirled it into position. Kay clambered in beside him, and for just a moment her eyes quested through avenues of blossoms, beyond the house and thence into the illimitable vista of graceful cypress and black water; of trees and shrubs and flowers.

"It's unbelievably beautiful," she said.

He caught her mood and held the car motionless for a moment. "Just finding that out, Kay?"

"Yes."

He looked down at her. "You are a crazy kid. What do you mean: just finding it out?"

"Because it's always different." She groped for words. "Each day I think I know just exactly how exquisite it is . . . and then the next day I see something new."

She laughed awkwardly. "I suppose," she said, "that you'd have to be me to understand what I mean."

And in this she was right. From earliest childhood, Kay Forrest had met with world without fearlessness and unwavering trust . . . though the straightforward simplicity of this trust had, it is true, often reacted in a manner which would have shaken a less devout convert.

At the age of six Kay had returned from the woods with chubby hands red and swollen from too intimate contact with some poisonous wild flowers. Emma Forrest had banded them to the accompaniment of a maternal tirade against Kay in particular and Nature in general, and Kay had submitted to both treatments in stoic silence. But it was later that day—when throbbing fingers had refused to be soothed by her father's gentle, sympathetic caresses—that she had sobbed out her justification:

"Oh! Daddy . . . they were so pretty."

Even through years which had brought disillusionment and unanswered questions, she had managed to retain her faith that somewhere there was a serenity, a beauty, which was a justification for living.

And for this ideal, Kay fought gallantly. She gratefully acknowledged her maternal inheritance: Fixed determination and unwavering strength of purpose. She knew what she wanted — not explicitly but vaguely—and rebuffs only temporarily shadowed young hazel eyes.

Kay laughed as she walked down to meet him.

Today, at nineteen, Kay was the same courageous little girl, eager to accept the risk of throbbing fingers for a touch of beauty. Standards, she had discovered, were too variable to be depended upon. They were yard-sticks which merely measured the mentality of the user. And so she came to depend more upon herself and her own judgment. Where there was no wrong in her own mind, no evil could exist. She was strong physically and sensitive emotionally, and until very recently her father had been her only real friend.

It was difficult, even yet, for Kay to realize just what Cathedral Gardens had meant to her. It was a fulfillment of nineteen years of struggle. To Christine Maynard she gave freely of her body because it was an outlet for the artistic urge within her . . . and in return, this communion with Nature had strengthened her faith.

The Hamiltons had contributed more than they—or she—suspected. Kay Forrest had been raised in that deadly middle-class atmosphere which is happily regarded as the backbone of the body politic. Her family was looked up to and regarded highly. They were fine, respectable, honest folks—held in great esteem by all who knew them, but somehow (save for her father) falling short of the ideal which she had created for herself.

And it was not until Kay had found herself briefly a part of the Hamiltons' family life that she had realized how she had, for nineteen years, been compelled to accept the makeshift for the genuine.

She brought her thoughts back to the present as Barney shifted into gear and rolled across the parking space which was already commencing to congest with the cars of eager tourists. He swung onto the hard-packed dirt road, touched the accelerator and headed toward town.

Kay said, "Have you the faintest idea, Barney Hamilton, what a wonderful thing your mother has done: creating those Gardens out of a section of swamp?"

He laughed. "Mother, two hundred workmen and a landscape engineer."

"Smart lad, aren't you? What I'm driving at is that it had to be someone like your mother . . . some unusual person even to think of doing what she has done. Do you realize that piece of swamp was worthless?"

"Do I realize it? My dear child, I know it! It was the only piece of property my revered maternal grandparents left which couldn't be sold for love, money or mortgage." His eyes were focused on the road with its border of tall, straight pine trees. "Mother's a pretty swell gal."

"She's more than that," Kay was very earnest. "She's the most colorful person in Beauregard County. You don't realize—"

"I'm dumb. You explain."

"Oh! I don't know . . . She's been a tradition around here. All my life I've heard women talk about Ruth Hamilton. They all boast about the fact that they went to school with her in Beverly. They talk about what a lovely girl she was, and how sweet. They marvel at her life . . ."

"From rags to riches," said he. "Ruth Hamilton, only child of a poor but honest druggist . . ."

The girl laughed and said sternly, "Nuts! She was the darned attractive child of an intelligent couple who adored her and gave her advantages which weren't even thought of in Beverly in those days. College in the East. Europe . . . when to most folks here Europe meant nothing but a small section of the big globe in the little red school-house."

"Keep talking, Child. I love to hear you become enthusiastic." His eyes were thoughtful. "Queer how things work out. It was in Europe . . . Villefranche, I think . . . that Mother met Dad." He was silent for just a moment. "I wish you had known him. There was a grand guy."

"He must have been."

"I'm stating that he was. Had enough dough and enough family not to care about either. Fell for Mother like a ton of bricks, and they played sweetheart until he died. It was a bump . . . but there's one good thing about it."

"What?"

"That he didn't live to see the crash. That he never worried about what might happen to Mother and Sis and me. You see, when he died he thought we were pretty well taken care of even unto the third or fourth generation." Barney was trying to shake off a momentary feeling of oppression. "Dad and I were mighty good pals. We played around together."

"It must have been pretty wonderful . . ." Kay made an effort to lighten Barney's mood. "You never will quite know what your mother has meant to this town. Growing up here . . . and then going away, living in New York. Entertaining folks with names that are merely printed words to Beverly folks. It's been right funny: before I could understand I used to hear the ladies talking about Ruth this and Ruth that . . . My dear, did you read where Ruth Hamilton entertained the So-and-so's at Southampton last week? And, 'Ruth will be sailing for a season on the Riviera very soon with her family.' I didn't know who she was . . . and it didn't matter. She was a Beverly girl—"

"Home-town lady makes good."

"Exactly." Kay Forrest was quite serious. "Perhaps that's why she came to mean so much to me, even when I thought I'd never meet her. I'm pretty much of a small-town girl myself."

"But with possibilities."

"Perhaps. You know, I wonder how your mother really likes being back in Beverly after all these years: after all the luxuries she's been accustomed to?"

"She likes it. Plenty."

"But where did she get the courage to come back?"

"Sacrifice for me. The infant terrible. I've been given to understand that her real motive was to save me from destruction and dry-rot."

"You're crazy."

"Cross my heart. Do you realize, young lady, that you are now enjoying the distinction of riding through nice, smelly, pine woods with a person who has been invited—politely, mind you, but firmly—to depart from more good schools than any other young man of similar age and lack of discretion?"

"And you're boasting about it!"

"Why not? I'm All-American scholastic resigner. Prep schools. Colleges."

"But, Barney . . . why? I know you're dumb, but surely—"

"Don't ask questions that have no answers. Solution to this problem eludes me. Always has and always will. I suppose I'm just naturally kind-hearted and lazy. I might have learned Latin and Greek, but somehow I never found a polo pony who could understand a word of either of those languages. Therefore, it all seemed useless. I made straight A's on things which I did like and used to argue violently and valiantly that since there were enough courses which I enjoyed, I shouldn't be afflicted with those which bored me. And that was the constant debate between myself and many faculties. They always managed to win, and thus I—Barney Hamilton—became the world's champion matriculator."

"A very charming young man with a definitely lopsided education."

"But cheerful and smiling . . . and always at your service, my darling." He chuckled. "And so, here I am. Mother had two ideas coming down here: first there was the thought that she could make a commercial go of these Gardens—"

"Which she has certainly done. Beverly has been standing on its ear ever since they opened."

"And secondly," he continued, "though she never was so crude as to put it into these words, she saw me—in New York—becoming a society bum. A chap raised in luxury and accustomed to something he could no longer afford. She had a lovely vision of the town of her girlhood . . . of plain, honest people who would—by precept and example—instill into me a consuming ambition to get down to earth."

"And it hasn't worked?"

"Maybe. I don't know. I like it . . . but how much of that is Beauregard County and how much a very pretty girl named Kay Forrest, deponent sayeth not. The point is, I'm here. So what? I can't paddle those sea-going bateaus as well as the average ten-year-old Negro or sleepy swamp angel. As a gardener I am two hundred per cent lush—with a capital Z. All I know about flowers is that they grow in corsages. And I haven't observed that Beverly is filled with positions of importance which are seeking me out. To be frank and honest—which is a very terrible thing to be—I cannot see where Mother has gotten anywhere except that Cathedral Gardens are destined to be a financial, as well as an artistic, success."

"And you're not ashamed?"

"Of what?"

"Yourself."

"Why? I haven't a bad habit. Not a major vice, anyway. I never kick. I enjoy what the moment offers. I like good weather and pretty flowers and some of the folks in Beverly and all of the ones who live in Chicora. I enjoy hunting quail and deer, and I love fishing. The horseback-riding around here is pretty good . . . and I very definitely have fallen in love."

"Another pleasure of the moment?"

He smiled down at her. "If you were younger, I'd spank you for that." Then, after a pause, "It might be fun anyway."

Kay said, "You're utterly lazy and worthless, Barney Hamilton. But I'm fond of you, just the same."

He grinned. "And I'm not to be lectured any more today?"

"Not a time."

"Well then," he announced sternly, "You are."

"How come?"

"Reasons." He gestured. "With whom are you planning to trip the light fantastic tonight?"

She said, "Kirk Reynolds."

"So I thought." There was a hint of seriousness in his manner. "If I said that Mr. Reynolds was exceedingly bad medicine for a young gal, would you think I was jealous?"

"Perhaps."

"And maybe you'd be right. But, Sugarfoots—this lad is poison. Plumb naughty, I might say."

"Because he gambles?"

"Nix. Because of lots of things. You can't tie him down to specific offenses. He's just naturally a bad citizen . . . and so you choose him as your dancing partner."

"He invited me."

"So what? You could have gone with me if you were just naturally set on edifying the tourists at the White Star Hotel."

"You didn't ask me." She hesitated for a moment. "Listen, Barney—I don't care three hoots about Kirk Reynolds. But he is a Beverly boy, and I looked up to him when I was a kid. Also, I think he's picturesque."

Barney said, "You win. But watch your step, honey. Kirk's been places and seen things. The town's going to talk about your going to the hotel dance with him."

"The town talks anyway. I'm used to it."

"Check. So have a good time and tomorrow afternoon when I come for you, you can tell me all about it."

The nightly dances at the White Star Hotel had been inaugurated for the purpose of relieving the nocturnal boredom of Cathedral Gardens tourists. They had startled Beverly at first, and continued to startle the little town, even though—as social functions—they left much to be desired. Visitors declared that the dances were good fun, or cute, or just simply amusing.

The music was furnished by a local organization which styled itself Bud Carter's Jazz Hounds. It was heavy on traps and trumpet, and somewhat short on melody; but the shirt-sleeved members played with an enthusiasm which more than atoned for an obvious lack of genius.

The dancers were recruited from hotel guests, visitors who were scattered about town in the numerous private homes which had placarded their front lawns with signs announcing that tourists would be accommodated . . . with always a tiny handful of natives, plus an occasional couple from the aristocratic little town of Chicora, six miles away.

PAUL REVIEWS HIS LIFE

LESSON TEXT—Philippians 1:12-14, 21-24; 3:12-14; II Timothy 4:7, 8.
GOLDEN TEXT—I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.—II Timothy 4:7.

Self-examination may be a most profitable experience if carried out in the right spirit and for a good purpose. It may be very humbling to look at one's experiences and accomplishments in honest appraisal, but the very humility which is thus brought about may be the first step toward better things and may prove to be a real means of blessing.

Paul, whose life we have been studying together for the last three months, made a review of his own life and experience in various places in his epistles. We cannot study them all, but in the brief portions before us we find that the apostle had laid hold of those certainties without which life is largely meaningless and useless. He had found victory over both himself and his circumstances. He was perfectly clear about his eternal destiny. He had a goal toward which his life was directed in earnest endeavor, and he had in view the reward which was to be his when he met his God. What an excellent opportunity we have to bring out the truth as related to ourselves on this coming Lord's Day.

I. Living Above Circumstances

(Phil. 1:12-14).

Paul had been imprisoned for the gospel's sake. Did that stop him? No, for he made the very guards who were assigned to watch him at his house the objects of his ministry and they, in turn, became missionaries of the cross. He sought to win each one as he took his designated period of guard service and then sent him out as a testimony to "the whole Praetorian guard and to all the rest" (v. 13, R. V.). What a consistent and glowing Christian life Paul must have lived day by day.

Not only were some of his Christian brethren encouraged by his example to preach the gospel, but we note in verse 15 that others, taking advantage of the fact that Paul was in prison, went out to preach just to show that they were as good as he, making their very preaching an expression of their envy of his popularity. Paul showed victory over circumstances by thanking God that the gospel was preached, even though it was done in a wrong spirit.

II. Facing Eternity With Joy

(Phil. 1:21, 24).

To Paul, departure from this life would mean his entering into perfect fellowship with Christ and unlimited service for Him. He therefore had a strong desire to depart and to be with the Lord. He would not, however, turn away from his present privilege and duty. If it was God's will that he should abide in the flesh, he purposed that it should be literally true of him that to live is Christ. If that be true in a man's life, then it must necessarily follow that to die is gain. The reason men fear death is that in place of saying "to live is Christ," they say "to live is money," "position," "pleasure," or even "sin."

III. Pressing Toward the Goal

(Phil. 3:12-14).

These are the words of the man who possibly was the greatest Christian and Christian worker of all time. Was he satisfied with himself? No, the Spirit of Christ in him and the vision of the goal which he had not yet attained made him press on.

The spiritually minded Christian has no word of commendation for past success, he gives Christ the glory. He does not permit past failures to hold him back, for they have been put under the blood. He is not content merely to hold his own, for he knows that to stand still is to go back. Christian friends, let us by God's blessing and grace take a forward step today, and tomorrow, and the day after, that we may, like Paul, press on toward the goal to the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

Scripture speaks frequently of the reward which shall come to the faithful Christian at the close of a life of holiness and service for Christ. It is no doubt commendable that Christians do not often speak of their reward, for it should be true of every servant of Christ that the love of Christ should constrain him. On the other hand, it is important that we keep before us the fact that at the end of the road there is recognition by "the Lord, the righteous Judge," and that we may properly look forward to the receiving of the crown of righteousness from His hand. The life of the Christian has glorious meaning from beginning to end, yes, and on through all eternity!

Christ's Power

One of the undeniable miracles of Christian history is the mystic power of the disciples of Christ to remain faithful to Him in spite of all possible temptations to desert the faith.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

SUNSHINE 4-H CLUB NEWS

Pearl Wille, Club Reporter
The Sunshine 4-H club girls met Thursday night, June 15 at the Dowling home. Our leader, Mrs. Hilda Kampe, was absent because of illness. The girls are all working very hard on their clothing project so they will be ready for the moving pictures which are going to be made of the club room. Luella Hager gave a talk on the correct way to set a table. Shoes and how to buy them was the subject chosen by Dorothy Wille, but we wonder if she takes her own advice because she was complaining of aching feet at the dance the other night. Marion Keuch talked on smoking and drinking which started a discussion by the other girls on this subject. Mary Dowling proved a very gracious hostess when everyone was seated around the beautifully decorated table for a delicious lunch after the meeting.

WINNER IN ESSAY CONTEST

Sherman Knox, Jr., won second place in the American Legion Essay Contest in which the students of the Blue Island Community High School participated. The prize winning essay entitled: "What It Means To Me To Live In America" was as follows:

America is best defined by the immortal anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner". Truly, it expresses the real meaning of this comparable nation. The words, "The land of the free and the home of the brave" are not applicable to any other modern nation but the United States. This generally regarded fact presents the explanation as to why this country has continually prospered and advanced while the rest of the world has fallen to the low standards set during the Middle Ages.

Freedom and equality are incentives which are born within the individual. Everyone desires to have them; everyone is determined to get them. They are the underlying principles of a successful nation. They form the basis of democracy. The denial of these factors by certain leading European powers is responsible for the rapid and steady growth of America. As the ultimate means of securing them, men of all races, creeds, and colors migrated to the land of liberty. In the comparatively short period of two hundred years they have molded a mighty nation that has never been and probably will never be equaled in any respect.

As a citizen of the United States, everyone is assured of freedom, equality, and justice. These rights and privileges shall never be disregarded in any respect, as long as the individual remains faithful to the firmly established laws of government. This guarantee is the main advantage of citizenship. All people can have it. The realization of this fact alone by foreign-born persons is largely responsible for the ever increasing number of immigrants to this country.

America is a government of the people. All citizens are a part of it. They share equally in its many benefits and also in the necessary disadvantages. They are blessed with the created equal. They have formed an invulnerable nation that shall no perish from the earth.

America is governed by the people. Each person has an indirect control over it; he chooses its representatives by ballot. This is the fairest and most efficient means of selection. It is a method that, at present, is most uncommon in the Eastern World. It is a right and privilege that is derived from citizenship and is the instrument of self-government.

The debt owed to the American people is immeasurable. Repayment is impossible and unnecessary. The chief interest of this benevolent nation is to make the world a better place in which to live. This it has done very efficiently done, for the influence of the American will has played an important part in the recent development of the few remaining civilized nations. America's independent modern form of government and its truly great leaders have been responsible for this desirable charity.

The American Citizen takes pride in his country. He realizes what wonderful opportunities are really offered to him in this great democracy. For this reason, he is determined to do all in his capacity to advance the nation and better the living conditions within it.

On Friday they played Mokena at Mokena and were defeated by a score of 11 to 8. Their next game will be to-night on their home diamond vs. Lincoln Estates team.

The following letter has been received from Rev. G. S. Gerhold who is enjoying a vacation in Michigan:

It is one thing to be on a planned vacation where vacationing is the only thought in mind and an altogether different proposition when your dentist, after having done his utmost to relieve you of one of your most valuable possessions nonchalantly informs you that since at least you can speak only with your tongue you might as well go and take a much needed rest.

But after the first resentment of being pushed around has passed and you are comfortably located on a lake, on which there are others, who like yourself, have been pushed out of the hustle and bustle of life, life soon takes on a different aspect. It is very much like viewing the earth from an aeroplane. You see more of its beauty and less of its blemishes.

The people one meets here have laid aside the mask and appear as they are in reality and one is surprised how little difference there is between the man who in his private office as head of a large concern can be seen only by special appointment and the chap in an abbreviated bathing suit who stops as he passes your cottage to chat about anything but business or politics.

The whole group can get much more excited about the wild duck, which apparently, disgusted with the intrusion of man upon her domain, takes her ducklings into two and swims out to a little uninhabited island in the middle of the lake where she hopes to find the desired seclusion, than about the rise or fall of the stock market.

What would happen if one of the little fellows should be too weak to make the trip and another answers: "The application of the law of the survival of the fittest," and just then one drops out of the line and disappears in a watery grave.

It is surprising to note what a different attitude people take towards life in general and above all towards their own infirmities when the pressure of so-called civilization has been lifted for the time being. One somehow feels that nature's God never makes a mistake where at first sight he seems cruel and heartless in eliminating the unfit, since only by this process can nature retain her strength and beauty.

Might this not also be true in regard to God's dealing with the human race? Is not, after all, what we see in history a process of the elimination of the unfit in order that we all might better fulfil his mission on earth?

With greetings to all our friends, G. S. Gerhold and family.

FLY EXTERMINATOR

According to the Cook County Farm Bureau, one of the simplest exterminators for flies that can be used in buildings and in other places has been tried out at the University of Illinois with good success.

Take a pint of milk, dilute it with an equal volume of water and add 2 teaspoonsful of Formaline. This can be poured into a pan or plate and a slice of bread layed in the plate and the plate set where flies will have access to it. Flies go after this greedily and one drink is all that is necessary to put them out of the way.

No longer any doubt that Garner is a real candidate for the Democratic nomination for President . . . Democratic leaders are doing their utmost to prevent further opening up of the general tax situation . . . I. C. C. hearings disclose that Canadians have grabbed the shipment of the bulk of American-grown wheat.

WASHINGTON.—It is now obvious that John Nance Garner is a real candidate for the Democratic nomination for President next year whether President Roosevelt chooses to run for a third term or not. Incidentally, there is one mystery about Garner which ought to be cleared up right now. He is far from being a sphinx, just as Calvin Coolidge was far from being a sphinx. But Garner is and Coolidge was protected from quotation by a simple rule governing his relations with newspaper men. Coolidge would talk to them, and let his views be stated, but under no circumstances could quotation marks be used.

It was to get around this difficulty that the newspaper men, while Coolidge was President, invented the mythical "White House Spokesman." Lots of people throughout the country assumed that there really was a "Spokesman." They were right. It was Calvin Coolidge.

Just so, in the present instance, when newspaper men hear that Garner is advocating something, or doing something, and ask him about it, they cannot put quotation marks around what Garner says in reply. But they can print the answers, and they can say that Garner said them. In fact sometimes they stretch it a bit, for Garner very obviously has another political rule in addition to avoiding direct quotations, which is that he denies nothing.

There was a slip-up on this, incidentally, a few days ago in connection with the Hatch bill to outlaw participation in the election of government workers in the elections of federal officers (the original bill would have made possible participation in primaries and the election of delegates to national conventions as well). A young reporter assumed because Garner did not say he could not be quoted as saying this bill would be "law before we quit" that it was all right to quote him. So he did.

Never Any Difficulty in Finding How Garner Stands

But while the old New York World attacked Coolidge bitterly for putting out propaganda under quotation marks assigned to the "White House Spokesman" present critics of Garner, in magazine articles and elsewhere, are attacking the vice president on the other flank. They are assuming that he really never says anything. Naturally Garner's other rule, about no denials, protects them in this inaccuracy. A denial would sound sort of silly anyhow.

But the truth is that any reputable newspaper man in Washington has very little difficulty in finding out where Garner stands on anything, though he will come home without the bacon if his editor insists on quotation marks.

Another type of comment from New Deal sources which Garner has had to take, or break his rule by denying, is that he is really in full sympathy with the New Deal, and that all the newspaper stories about his being the brains behind some of the anti-New Deal strategy on Capitol Hill are the bunk.

This has about ended, however, for the simple reason that it has been so obvious what Garner did in the court fight, his attitude about "letting the cattle get a little fat on them," referring to business, (this was said to the President face to face by Garner more than a year ago and was quoted to newspaper men by others present) and his known views and activities in other controversies, that to write any more about his being a 100 per cent New Dealer would merely make the writer absurd.

Try to Prevent Opening Up of General Tax Situation

Democratic leaders in congress are doing their utmost to prevent any further opening up of the general tax situation. For instance, Chairman Robert Doughton of the house ways and means committee has been flooded with requests for a brief hearing from various industries which are being subjected to special taxation, just as radios (5 per cent), Doughton has crisply told one and all that there is no desire to hear testimony on this, and has refused requests even for as brief a period as 10 minutes. (This happens to be the time the radio industry requested.)

The average person who buys a radio, of course, does not realize that he or she is paying any tax at all. The radio people would like to have a partial exemption. They claim that they find a certain competition in other house furnishings and appliances. Thus, they contend, they would like to have the cabinet containing the radio exempted, because as an article of furniture it is, in a sort of a way, competing in the housewife's mind with a fancy table to occupy a particular corner.

They also complain of another type of competition. The family budget may be such that it is a question of whether to buy a radio or a washing machine. Of course, the latter is not taxed, while the radio is taxed 5 per cent.

"Now what's the use of taking up the committee's time with an argument like that?" an old member said to a young radio man. "You know perfectly well you could not get anywhere. All we could do would be to decide that as between the purchase of an article to save the good wife's back and a radio the government had no choice but to encourage the washing machine."

Business Interests Hold Their Fire for the Senate

As a matter of fact, however, most business interests having an idea that they might get somewhere in the tax changes are not figuring on the house at all. They are holding their fire for the senate. There are two reasons for this. One is that the house is determined to rush some sort of tax bill through. Until that is done the business interests won't know exactly what they have to fight against, and what to fight for.

For example, if their proposition is contained in the house bill as it is passed, then all they have to do is to watch to see that the senate does not strike it out. Anyway, they would have a chance in conference when the drafts of the bills as passed by the house and senate are adjusted by the conferees.

If their proposition is not contained in the house draft, then they will have more time, and more opportunity, to work for a change by the senators. Almost any industry can count on active support from a few senators—if from no one else than from the senators from the states in which their industries are active. Besides, one senator can often force changes in any bill. For one thing he can discuss the matter on the floor, taking up the senate's time, until the cows come home, a privilege which the individual member of the house does not have. The representative's time is doled out to him in very small doses and with even the subject matter restricted.

Important Facts Gleaned At I. C. C. Freight Hearing

Nobody paid much attention to hearings conducted by the interstate commerce commission in which the operators on the old Erie canal—the New York Barge canal—were exact—protested against the cut in freight rates on grain by the railroads from New York to Buffalo.

Actually the hearings brought out some facts which are not only highly important to everybody in this country who pays taxes, but have a very definite bearing on several major proposals in the offing, including the St. Lawrence seaway, TVA, river development all over the country, public power, etc.

What the railroads did was to reduce the rate per bushel on grain from Buffalo to New York from 6.7 cents to 5 cents flat. The canal operators claimed that this would ruin them—that they had to have a differential under the railroad rates because of the longer time required, higher insurance, etc.

The funny part of the whole business is that the railroads didn't make that cut in grain rates this summer in order to take business from the Barge canal. They did it to get some of the business back which the Canadians have been taking from them, and taking, incidentally, without the aid of a St. Lawrence seaway, for which Uncle Sam would pay half the cost.

Canadians Grab Shipment Of American-Grown Wheat

Last year, it was testified, 77,000 bushels of American wheat were shipped abroad through Canadian ports, as against only 30,000 bushels shipped via United States ports. The percentage of wheat which moved through the United States ports to export in 1932 was 76. In 1933 this had shrunk to 23 per cent. Bear in mind that in all instances these quantities and percentages of wheat refer exclusively to wheat grown in the United States. Canadian wheat moved, of course, almost exclusively through Canadian ports.

The American city most interested in all this, of course, is Buffalo. The big idea of the Barge canal was to make commerce through Buffalo. New York state has spent untold millions with this objective, first to build the original Erie canal, before it was realized that the railroads were to become the big freight movers of the country, and before trucks were conceived, and then later to make the waterway a big modern development, when it was rechristened the Barge canal.

Like so many other waterways, however, the results have never justified the expectations. It is not fair to criticize the original concept, because that was before anyone realized what the railroads would become. It seemed then that wheat and other goods from the Great Lakes region and westward, moving by water to Buffalo, and then trans-shipped to barges for New York, would provide a growing tide of commerce ample to justify the expenditure.

Half of Wheat Belt Dry Again

Lack of Moisture Indicates Shortage in Grain; Light Winter Crop.

CHICAGO.—Reports of drouth covering a large part of the American wheat belt and extending north into the three western Canadian provinces have been received. It was estimated that over 50 per cent of the total North American wheat acreage is in the dry area.

A large part of the area seeded to wheat west of the 100th meridian was said to be rather urgently in need of additional moisture. There has been steady deterioration in the outlook for winter wheat in parts of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, and Nebraska, and estimates on the probable harvest are being revised downward.

The department of agriculture's report suggested 544,000,000 bushels of winter wheat. This is the smallest crop in about 25 years, with the exception of the 1933-35 period, when domestic production dropped below requirements. Last year's crop was a bumper one at 687,000,000 bushels.

Speculators Perk Up.

The combination of a shortage of surface and subsoil moisture in the American Northwest has caused wheat speculators to pay much more attention to weather reports from the latter area than they normally do at this season. While seeding has been completed and there was sufficient moisture to germinate the grain additional moisture must be received in the immediate future in order to prevent rapid deterioration in the outlook. A Chicago expert, after allowing for past weather conditions and normal precipitation to July 1, suggests that the spring wheat crop in the Dakotas may be about 30,000,000 bushels less than in 1933.

The outlook at the present time is for a possible aggregate wheat crop of about 750,000,000 bushels, experts say, or about the same as the average for the 1927-36 period—about 50,000,000 bushels in excess of domestic requirements.

Corn Planting Well Along.

Planting of corn made rapid progress as the result of favorable weather conditions. The critical stage in the growth of the corn crop will come late in July and early in August when it starts to tassle. It is at this time that rain and moderate temperatures are most essential if a large yield is to be secured. The trend of the market is expected to be determined largely by weather conditions during that period.

All deliveries of wheat, oats, and soy beans have sold at new seasonal high prices. The small grains were affected mainly by dry weather reports, and soy beans by a scarcity of the cash article. Despite a record crop of soy beans harvested last year supplies are reported to be unusually light.

Vermont Marks Birthday Of First Morgan Horse

MONTPELIER, VT.—The 150th anniversary of the birth of a horse is being celebrated by Vermont this year.

The horse was Justin Morgan, recognized as foundation stock for the American saddle horse, for the American trotting horse and for the Tennessee walking horse.

When in Springfield, Mass., as a three-year-old colt, the horse was taken by one Justin Morgan, a music teacher, in exchange for an unpaid $25 bill and brought to the latter's new Randolph, Vt., home.

At first the horse was known as Figure, later as Justin Morgan's Figure and finally as Justin Morgan. Evidence proves that he was sired by the thoroughbred True Briton, otherwise known as Beautiful Bay, which was stolen from Colonel De Lancey, the Tory, by three Yankees at King's Bridge, N. Y., during the Revolutionary war. The dam was a daughter of Wild Air, another of the great sires of the day.

Recognizing that the name Morgan has come to mean "beauty, spirit and action to all lovers of the horse, and (that) the Morgan horses for many years held the world's record for trotting horses," the Vermont legislature appointed a special committee to play for the 150th anniversary of the horse's birth.

Earliest Fireplace Of Man Discovered

ROME.—What is believed here to be the earliest known fireplace made by man has been found in a grotto near San Felice Circeo, on the coast between Rome and Naples.

It is believed to be 130,000 years old and to belong to the final Ice age.

A landslide which occurred thousands of years before Ulysses sailed these waters and encountered the bewitching Circe kept it intact until its discovery by a young Italian archeologist, Prof. A. C. Blanc.

PATTERN DEPARTMENT

AS YOU see from the diagram, the pretty daytime dress (1754) consists of just two pieces to sew together. Then make the easy darts at the neckline and waistline, so that your dress will be slim and softly full over the bosom, edge the sleeves and neckline with lace or ruching—and there you are! Anybody can do it, and it's so attractive and comfortable. Linen, gingham, batiste and lawn are nice materials for this.

Cool, Comely Jacket Frock.

If you're looking for an extremely smart and pleasantly youthful jacket ensemble in women's sizes, 1761 is the pattern for you. Gatherers make the bodice just full enough, and the paneled skirt, cut to a high waistline, is beautifully slenderizing. The smart jacket is the most flattering length—certain to make your hips look slim. Chif-

Rebecca in 'Ivanhoe'

The original of Rebecca was Rebecca Grantz, daughter of Michael Grantz of Langerdorff in upper Silesia. Born on March 4, 1781, as a child and young woman she lived in Philadelphia, where she was known as "the good Jewess" and "the beautiful Jewess." Her portrait was painted by Malbone and by Sully.

It was Washington Irving who called her to the attention of Walter Scott. Miss Grantz had been a cherished friend of Irving's fiancée. She died August 27, 1869.

'What Kind of A Girl—'

By MARY ARMSTRONG
(Released by Associated Newspapers
WNU Service.)

SUCH a plain little wren she was that it seemed a pity for the girls to tease her so much. She was small and meek and her hair was straight and ash blonde and the only time her face had any color in it was when one of the office girls razed her about boys, and then her whole face would mantle with rebellious color, almost as though in unison with the blazing thoughts she controlled so well.

Sally Travis was the worst hector of all. Sally, who had not one beau but a dozen at a time, to stop and hector poor mousy little Mary Jane White, who somehow was never called "Mary" by any one in that vast office, but simply prim, proper "Miss White."

Miss White didn't go to lunch till last; she was forever finishing up some extra work for some one so that some one might "make" a luncheon date, and about three nights a week she worked overtime at night so that somebody might get away early for pleasure or what not. And today she had looked wistfully after Sally as she ran liting to meet Don for lunch. Wistfully, because suddenly little Miss White was weary and very tired of being the office goat.

Because men who had loved Sally were rarely inclined to notice sober, sedate, mousy little girls . . . even on the rebound. For Sally invariably "let them out" as the saying goes, as soon as a more eligible man appeared on the horizon!

Once, long ago, Sally had in a wild burst of generosity invited Miss White to go on a party with a crowd of her friends and at first it almost seemed as though Miss White were going to accept; she looked so happy she seemed almost pretty. Then Sally had said with characteristic mischief: "Of course, this isn't a tame affair, Miss White! We dress and dance and, uh, you know!" and Miss White looked her levelly in the eyes and said: "I suppose you mean it's a petting party, Miss Travis?" and sarcasm dripped from every word as Sally assured her that she never went on any tame affairs. Miss White's slow, regretful refusal brought a sting of color to Sally's face as she made some sort of muttering retort that drained all the wild-rose blush from Miss White's face and brought forth the only reply the office had ever known her to make under fire. It was simply: "I'm afraid I'm not the kind of girl you're looking for for this party, Miss Travis!" and it was just exactly like Sally Travis to pick up that phrase, misquote it and derive the priggish, prim defense slogan of every unloved, unsought girl: "Not that kind of girl!"

Sally was telling Don, now, about Mary Jane. She was drawing a word picture of a prim, prudish, unlovely old maid and Don listened in amazement; surely she couldn't mean that quiet, sober, refined little girl who worked in his department? Why, she seemed like a regular scout. But Don did not say that to Sally; he remained discreetly silent and let the much-made-up Miss Travis rave on.

Two nights later Don came back for some forgotten papers and stopped in amazement to see Mary Jane bent over a desk covered with papers. It was almost seven and she hadn't gone home yet! He felt furious with the management for this oversight and paused to speak to the busily working girl.

"Oh, yes, Miss Travis had a dinner date so I agreed to finish these for her." It was said with no effort toward martyrdom or self-pity.

"Look here, did Miss Travis leave all that work for you? Why I sent that through to her early this morning!" he exclaimed. Don removed hat and coat and, against Miss White's indignant protests, collected half the extra work and, plunging into it, finished it before 7:30, just as Mary Jane finished her half.

It seemed natural enough, then, for them to go out and find a lunch-room, and over the delicious fried chicken and waffles, became better acquainted.

The soft, shaded table light cast a warm, pink glow to Mary Jane's face, and her hair, simply knotted at the back of her head, seemed somehow so much more dignified and feminine than the sheared, clipped heads of the other office girls. And she wore a lacy collar and cuff set with her simple flannel dress and for the first time in his life, Don was struck with the loveliness of a truly feminine girl. He became animated, eager; did his best to be charming and interesting, and when he bade Miss White good night, after the movie they had later attended, he went home walking on air—elated over having discovered a girl who could fill the place his mother had filled in his life. Why, Miss White was a real little lady! "Aren't you afraid, Miss White, that Wilbur will think you that sort of girl?" asked Sally, the light of the tormenter in her eye as Sally prepared to go to lunch with Don.

"There's no danger," challenged Don's icy, even voice from the hallway, "of any one mistaking Miss White for your type of girl, Miss Travis!" and Sally stared at him with furious, enraged eyes as he calmly took Mary Jane's arm and went softly down the hall!

STRAWBERRY-WHIPPED-CREAM ICE
See Recipe Below.

Cold, Frosty and Delicious

Do you remember how, as a child, a party just wasn't a party unless you had ice cream? Do such childhood memories even now create little appetite longings for that frosty, flavormous dish—longings that send you hurrying to the kitchen to make up a batch of your own favorite frozen dessert?

Homemade ice creams and sherbets are more popular than ever now that efficient modern ice cream freezers make quick work of their preparation. (You can freeze smooth, velvety sherbets and ice cream in 5 to 10 minutes flat!) And when the advent of torrid weather calls for something special to encourage appetites made indifferent by the onslaught of heat waves, these delicious treats come into their own!

Here are some simple hints on making freezer ice creams with a collection of brand new recipes for cool, refreshing, frozen desserts—recipes which I've tested in my own kitchen and found to be as practical as they are appealing:

Hints on Making Ice Cream Freezer Ice Cream.

1. Follow directions in the recipe.
2. Scald freezing container, dasher and cover before using.
3. Crush or crack the ice finely.
4. Fill freezing container only $\frac{3}{4}$ full of ice cream mixture, to allow for expansion.
5. Cover tightly.
6. Adjust the dasher so that the handle turns easily and smoothly.
7. Use three parts crushed ice to one part rock salt, arranging in alternate layers.
8. Turn the crank slowly and steadily until turning becomes difficult.
9. When the mixture is frozen (5 to 10 minutes, with a modern ice cream freezer), wipe around the top of the container with a cloth, and remove cover carefully, so that no ice or salt falls into the mixture.
10. Remove the dasher, and pack down the cream with a spoon.
11. Replace the cover, and drain off the water from the freezer.
12. Repack with ice and salt. Cover with burlap bag or heavy paper, and allow to "ripen" for about an hour before serving.

Peppermint Candy Ice Cream.

$\frac{1}{2}$ pound peppermint stick candy
1 quart thin cream
Break the stick candy into pieces. Pour the cream over the candy and place in the refrigerator over night. Then pour the mixture into the freezing well of an ice cream freezer, pack with three parts crushed ice to one part rock salt, and freeze.

Strawberry or Raspberry Preserves Ice Cream.

(Serves 5-6)
1 pint coffee cream
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
1 cup strawberry or raspberry preserves
Combine all the ingredients and pour the mixture into the freezing container of a modern ice cream freezer. Assemble the freezer and cover. Pack with ice and salt, using three parts crushed ice to one part rock salt. Freeze.

Buttermilk Ice Cream.

(Makes about $1\frac{1}{2}$ quarts)
3 cups buttermilk
1 cup crushed pineapple
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup sugar
3 tablespoons lemon juice
1 egg white (stiffly beaten)
Combine the buttermilk, pineapple, sugar and lemon juice. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg white, and pour into freezing container of ice cream freezer. Assemble the freezer and cover. Pack with a mixture of three parts crushed ice and one part rock salt. Freeze.

Cream-Less Ice Cream.

(Makes 2 quarts)

$\frac{3}{4}$ cup sugar
4 tablespoons flour
1 quart milk (scalded)
2 eggs (beaten separately)
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
Combine sugar and flour and blend with scalded milk; then cook over low flame, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens. Remove from flame and pour three tablespoons of the mixture over beaten egg yolks. Blend thoroughly, then add to custard mixture, together with salt and vanilla extract. Chill. Pour mixture into freezing container of modern ice cream freezer. Pour the stiffly beaten egg whites over and then assemble the freezer and cover. Pack with mixture of three parts crushed ice and one part rock salt. Freeze.

Strawberry Whipped Cream Ice.

(Serves 6)

1 quart strawberries
2 cups sugar
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup lemon juice
1 pint cold water
1 cup whipped cream sweetened with 1 tablespoon confectioners' sugar

Mash the berries, add the sugar and lemon juice, and let stand for about an hour. Add the water, and pour the mixture into the freezing container of an ice cream freezer. Assemble the freezer and cover. Pack with a mixture of three parts crushed ice and one part rock salt. Turn the crank slowly and steadily until the mixture thickens (about five minutes). Carefully remove the cover and the dasher, fill the hollow with sweetened whipped cream, cover with wax paper, replace the cover and repack with ice and salt. Let stand for about three hours before serving.

Lemon Cream Sherbet.
(Makes about 2 quarts)
 $\frac{3}{4}$ cup lemon rind (grated)
1 cup cold water
1 cup lemon juice
4 cups sugar
2 eggs (beaten)
5 cups milk
2 cups heavy cream
Put the freshly grated lemon rind in a saucepan with the cold water. Bring to a boil and strain. To the liquid add the lemon juice and the sugar. Stir well. Beat eggs and to them add the milk and cream. Assemble the freezer and pack with ice and salt. When the freezer is ready, combine the two mixtures for the ice cream, pouring the fruit mixture slowly into the milk and cream. Stir quickly, pour into the freezing container, cover and freeze.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

BETSY was all agog to have a bed with no foot piece and a padded head to match her spread. Ingenuity would have to substitute for money, and she was seriously considering this and that when the plumber was called to fix a leaky pipe.

The plumber took a fine saw and sawed a pipe in two just as if it were wood. Right then something clicked for Betsy. That old iron bed in the attic! It could be cut down. It was cut down, as shown in the sketch.

The top of this bed is padded with cotton basted to muslin. Betsy used an old comforter for padding.

Tommy Also Discovered Appeasement Is Difficult

Tommy Jones came home from school with tousled hair, rumpled clothes and a black eye.

"What have you been up to?" his mother demanded.

"I've been fighting Johnny Briggs," Tommy confessed.

"Well, take him this cake and make friends."

Tommy did so, but in the afternoon he came home with another black eye.

"Good gracious!" his mother exclaimed. "What on earth has happened now?"

"He did it again," Tommy said, sadly. "And he wants more cake tomorrow—or else!"

Out of Mind

"And what," bawled the interviewer, "what do you think of the modern girl?"

"Lor', sir," replied the centenarian, "I be a 'underd, I be, an' I gave up thinking 'bout the girls nigh on five years ago."

Her Virtue

"Another new outfit?" said Mr. Hobson. "Where on earth do you imagine I'll get the money from?"

"Whatever my faults may be, darling, I'm not inquisitive," replied his wife sweetly.

Girls today are not what they were 20 years ago, says a novelist. We agree; some of them are at least 10 years older.

To the Point

"Where shall we meet?"

"Anywhere you like."

"At what time?"

"Whenever it suits you."

"Very well—but be punctual!"

Fairy Tale

The taxi-driver jumped out and, running to the front of the bus, proceeded to tell the driver what he thought of him.

The bus-driver remained silent until the taxi-man had finished; then he leaned out and said, very gently, "I thought you'd be cross!"

We have organized and are sponsoring a boy and girl scout troop. We have had in the way of entertainment a good fellowship party, several displays of motion pictures and in general more social intercourse with our neighbors, which has promoted a better understanding of each other and solidified friendships. We also sponsored the Memorial day exercises and the Community Christmas tree and its program this year. We have as the outstanding event of the year, the first Homecoming and Fall Festival ever held in the 107 years of Mokena's existence. All of these events were highly successful and productive of much good in this community, and to you, each and every one, who in reality are this association, no little credit is due, for our first year of activities.

Being in our infancy, we were for monetary, and perhaps due caution and a full sense of our responsibility forced to act and work in a manner that at times seemed rather slow and insincere, however, caution many, many times we believe brings the most satisfactory results.

In conclusion let me say that we are now out of our swaddling clothes and I am convinced that this association is started on its way to permanent success and useful activity in this field. The Homecoming and Fall festival for this year is already under way and no doubt will be an annual event for years to come. We also have many important matters in committee, which will eventually bear fruit. We have and are making progress, but above all your conduct of and in community affairs, have merited, thus far, the confidence and moral support of every one in this vicinity, this, therefore must be our continued objective.
